Forward

I wrote these poems in the mid nineteen-nineties. I had just left a community centre for people with “severe and enduring” mental health problems, after being social work manager there for the previous seven years. Before that, I had run a smaller centre a few miles to the south for well over a decade.

You don't leave a working life of this kind lightly. It cannot be just a matter of shutting the door behind you.

You are leaving a building that feels a bit more like home than office ; circles of people who feel a bit more like members of your family, or community, or parish, than “colleagues”, or “clients” or “service users.” You have spent more time here with many of them, than you normally spend with your own family.

All the names have been changed, of course. They are fictional. But the actual people described are not.

The centre referred to here was “tendered out” in 1994. Then, in 2017, it was closed. Since then, has the gap in our community it will have left behind been filled by something better ? I fear not. Far from it.

In the poem on page 11 -“The Meal” - there is a reference to queues of people in the dining room. One of my first acts on being appointed there had been to buy round wooden tables for the centre dining-room. They had gone down well then and had lasted well, since. They were treasured, partly for what they symbolised.

For when I started in this work years before that, in the 1970's, your average mental health community centre didn't even have a building to itself, let alone tables and home-cooked food. You lodged precariously in church halls, and queued for your lunch.

Let us hope that “social inclusion,” the “recovery model”, “co-production” and all the rest does not simply drag us back full circle to where care in the community began - people on the edge of things, queuing up in church halls, with no tables at which to sit and eat.

Lorretta

She does not expect us to take her in - one can never be too careful these days - so she seats herself outside the ring and looks absent and ill-treated there like someone the whole world has sticked and stoned and shouldered into exile.

Crochet keeps her from idleness and Church from death by disassociation.

She sits in silence,
spinning out exquisite nothings.
She doesn't like them.
She stores them in careless piles on the shelves and tables of her still flat in its quiet and genteel street.
She lives in a dainty warehouse of vacated cobwebs.

Illness surrounds her like a fog, almost a skin. She is epileptic.
She is diabetic. Her ankles are constantly swollen. She is diagnosed Chronic Schizophrenic. But in church she lets rip, she flies, and her glad hands clap and she sings smiling among all those black faces - all that safe and gentle energy.
Her world becomes clearer in church and she devotes herself to its calls upon her, struggling over there almost daily.

We went on holiday once and towards the end, at breakfast on a fine day there in the perfect English garden (before us the sea, sparkling ; behind us the old Purbeck wall, the buddlia, the hollyhocks) she let rip again and for a clear hour or two in that far place she praised and she celebrated, she grieved and she reminisced....
For a clear hour or two there we were, looking out.

Now as she sits each week alone outside the ring,
I pause and touch her shoulder.
She turns.
The room dances with her smile.
The whole room
dances with her smile.

The Women's Workshop

The basement workshop has a lovely new floor surface - a metallic lino, moss green.
And the walls have been painted sun yellow.

My blue overalls are now deep lakes in a fragrant plain and working here
I'm a fish in my element laughing under the sun.

I make sense when I'm down here no-one gets to me
I can mean something
I can just belong.
I laugh

at my reflection
in these blue overalls.
I just get on down here.
I laugh in the sun.

Jeannie

Somewhere between here and Africa
Jeannie is prosperous.
She takes her ease.

She flits genteel
from chamber to chamber checking performances - the children quiet in their prescribed arena,

the servants refining the light evening meal.

Satisfied she retires for an hour to scan some novel of rave reviews.
She will bring grace at dinner to the task of hostess with her gentle elegance her trans-national dignity.

She likes to be doing - to garden, for instance, out there with the men.

Silence surrounds her like a cell, a private circle of the world's air.

She works enclosed out there making the garden fit for visitors somewhere between here and Africa.

There are whispers in the corridors and unkind corners
that tell of a drink problem, of teeth neglected and a faltering step, of an eye once grossly swollen.

But no one speaks out. No one comes near.

Jeannie reclines at her ease and keeps fast her secrets.
Somewhere between here and Africa lies her true name.

Winston

He walks like a grenadier - chest out and back straight - a slender man of note cruising the patch.

He's a sharp dresser
a waistcoat man a dark umbrella in the sun man a man who makes much of his hands with a cacophony of worthless rings.

And sometimes he's a camera man, smiling on the market crowds through shrewd predatory eyes.
His camera's a dud, though, a meaningless shell and raises an old question of where the true picture lies.

Some days ago
the neighbours managed it at last and got him re-housed.
By appearing from time to time at his front door with nothing but frilly pink knickers on, he frightened their small children ;

by cramming that miserable black hole he rented from the Council full to the brim
with old food,
trinkets and other street market refuse, he constituted a serious and genuine health hazard ;

and a few neighbours of course having just bought their own on extremely generous terms, just his being there threatened their profit margins and lowered the new tone.

The iron discipline of the market place
and all that....

“It’s all right for you
fucking do-gooders,” snarled one neighbour who knew her rights
and how to secure them.
“You don’t have to live ‘ere.”

He’ll cruise a new patch now our slender grenadier our man of note.
Chest out, back straight, he’ll be taking new pictures now.

The Meal

Something special about the meal something electric forging the dull elements into a new and hushed and human vibrancy - a making.

The food here is actually good each choice of menu a matter of passion personal risk and urgent debate resolved in meetings weeks in advance.

The tables are round of plain deal but five years on still surprisingly smart.

They like the tables.
They remember earlier times :
“We used to eat on trays all around the two rooms and we had to queue quietly
in a long line.
No-one questioned it.
Who were we to complain ?”

The two cooks get a tenner and a free meal.
There is a stringent job description so the money's hard earned.
They sit apart
once the meal is served eating with their morning's worker.
The morning's sweat drying on three foreheads seals their fellowship.

And they come, the people, from all their far edges their fastnesses
to sit here at the plain deal eight per table
forming the circle.
They come with their famishment no food can satisfy with their lostness
no finding here can heal.

The limitation of the event with its essentialness ; the simplicity of the being together in these plain circles with the distance each has travelled to get here ;
simply the eating
makes a new sense here
a true valuing.

No-one would dare say a grace here
but grace is present in all the racket of the business of eating, the clatter, the voices' rise and fall ;

in every movement
of fork to lips of eye to eye ; in every word that is spoken ; in every moment the circles remain unbroken.

From what forsaken places are we gathered here today.

Nancy

Nancy died in flames. A holy death.
Months before, she asked to work with wood and joined our workshop.

It was good having a female there and not just some right-on kid with shaven head, but an older presence, quiet, in a print dress, perhaps just beginning to state herself in her own terms. She embarked upon a shoe rack for her husband.

Now, when I handle the dowelling that she so carefully sanded week after week,

I wonder what do you do when you're in flames ?
Do you look out ?

What does the world look like through the wall of your own fire ?
Nancy lit herself in the family hallway.

She had three hairs on her upper lip and she couldn't bear it. Her husband had taken her to the Emergency only that morning.

"Oh doctor, she's bad.
It's really bad this time."

But Nancy
as usual could talk of nothing but those three barely visible hairs and they sent her home with the usual flat few words and small brown bottle.

For years she had watched herself in the mirror and seen nothing but a sprouting monster.

No words freed her.
No sedation.
Nothing but fire could make her whole.

And where had we been when she came to us her fire already flickering there yearning to break loose ?

If we had seen it would she have allowed us to grab the extinguishers, to call the fire brigade ?

Would any of us

have known what to do ?
I believe some dreadful joy was felt at the heart of the fire she made herself in the moments just before she died.

For just those moments she felt clean, entirely, triumphantly, innocent.

Abraham

Abraham is so meagre thin my thumb and finger tip to tip can circle his wrist like a bracelet - and all around leave air between.

And Abraham's mouth seems so pinkly enormous that his great laugh could bracelet my bracelet three times over -
and all around leave air between.

And each time we meet
I bracelet
his poor wrist and each time Abraham laughs greatly.

"Hey, Abraham !" I say.
"I had some sweet today, Mr Rogan, honest," says Abraham, laughing.
"But Abraham, look!" I say, braceletting.
"Ah well ! Ah well !" laughs Abraham, limping away.

Abraham has had a stroke.
It was not his age nor living habits.
Abraham is still largely a boy and his living expenses are not yet due.
It was a side-effect rare but known of his psychotropic medication.

In life he's always limped a little.
Now you can see it.

I keep pressing him to eat.

Damon

Damon fears the plain exchange of words
it's risky
you never know what might come sliding
out. So Damon
shouts Damon keeps shouting.

He even finds it hard to smile. Any softening
and the roof might fall in or demon jump you.
He screws his face up and roars at us : "Aaaah !"
We jump. Damon celebrates.

We had a moment of quiet once
after a long interview of terror when Damon in the rage of his helplessness threatened us with death and his partner looked on her eyes glassy
and their beautiful small son stood there
as still as death

and when the deadline had passed and the others had all gone away we paused together we two on the doorstep
the evening sky
clear and vivid
a fat thrush declaiming and Damon asked :
“Seriously now
as a father yourself what would you have done ?”

Damon knew exactly
why I was leaving.
He told me immediately.
It was to save on tax.
I'd got it all worked out.
My pension.....
And he knew this as well : in the end I had let it all get to me.
I was finished. Done.

On my final day, he brought his farewell gift, a huge set of Chinese porcelain boxed and complete.
He shouted:

“This is my heart !
No ! No !
My heart !
From my heart !”

Morgan

When I hear the church clock strike
I know at that moment Morgan, somewhere in torment, has just begun to inhale.

For this is Morgan's parish.
St Mary's sounds the quarters around Morgan's soul.

Time hangs heavy on him.
It forces flesh on him.
Beneath the haggard white line of that anchorite cheek-bone four old clocks on blackened lengths of string ride him everywhere he travels.
Should one get stolen, or just plain stop, he reasons three ought to do to fly him like a wounded Jumbo home for a crash landing.

Home is all oeuvre, a live sculpture formed from within.
For years the parish has supplied him with his materials and as the supply
has continued unchecked so Morgan's room to breathe has slowly diminished. Meticulous and fragile collections of litter now fill each room like library shelves.

Only his narrow bed
remains clear for him.
In the dense darkness radios hang like bats from the ceiling each tuned to a different world station each turned full on.
All night and from all quarters the world engages him.
Babel-Lord
Morgan gathers round his bed whatever is waste whatever discord.

The sweetness in his smile is incomprehensible.
But that melodious voice, those fastidious semantic games we engage in,
do sometimes seem to carry pleasure.
The bruised eyes sparkle, harbouring gaiety.
We make much of him.
We sit with him,
tolerating the smell,
the innumerable tatters, the festooning plastic bags, those brutal clocks.
Perhaps after all it is permissible to clear pain away from an instant or two of each day here in Morgan's parish.

Angela

Spasms of rage suffuse her face until the freckles ride like tiny sand-bars the wild red surge that beats and beats on the steady blue burn of her tired eyes.

"It's me age
them hot flushes
and then again it's me illness makes me say them things I don't mean them you must know that."

She was brought up in a Home.
Cast off before ever her cradling, still she managed there.
In the cold, crowded water she learned to swim not drown.
But you see it at the meal-table that frantic grabbing at all that tends her way.
Nothing escapes her.
She's an expert.
And her rage is insatiable and her desolation deeper than speech.

Up at five each morning she heads straight for the pool and covers eight lengths without fail.
She 's fighting furiously to keep her weight down to keep fit
to keep young
to keep going.

The few brave hearts who join her that early are strange birds. She's sure they mean her harm.
They are vessels of hurt
she dare not spill.
She holds them at bay by drilling them daily with a handsome blue glare.
They'll not stop her swimming where she may.

"Every year I try to get away.
You got to have something to look forward to, for God's sake.
I save for months.
But Paris last Autumn
was, oh, so lonely,
so hostile, you know, and I just felt too ill this year."

Cliff

Cliff visits once a week just for the Art Group.
He's touching base
between far-flung voyages at a place of calm waters.

His eyes hold so much light they frighten us - as if drops of the Aegean have been translated there lit by their own wild skies.

And his paintings hold a frightening power.
Some have been exhibited. His figures are Saints calm-faced their bodies knotted

like martyrs in agony, their sexual convolutions a nightmare of unfulfillment, a climactic frenzy of the artist's clothing crayon.

He is the despair of his poor mother.
Night after night she twists between the sheets
at each new thought and turmoil of him.

Her love is nails.
He slouches into the Art Room like a frightened bear escaping into the hills.

Jem

He thrills with unease
like an abandoned baby.
He can't sit still he can barely sit but ramps all day like a ringed bull from end to end of our snooker table.

The clothes are ridiculous.
He's been hanging tough for thirty years now.
The baseball cap, the long shorts, the swaggering shirt-tail - they hold together with increasing strain a baby with a bull neck ballooning towards middle age.

He assures you his Staffordshire is a Pitball. And no way will he be getting some wanky old muzzle, law or no law, fuck'em.

He's had no-one to show him how to be. So he turned for teacher not to the wild lethal street but the furtive shades of the tabloid.
Murdoch groomed him in the manners that maketh man - the pets that intimidate the words one smears on the meal table.

Strangers exist to be mastered and humiliated, especially women.
Aggression must be met with aggression twice as destructive, even if no anger is felt. To cry is unthinkable (But such a relief !
“When someone leaves I’ve got to know, I get really pissed off, y’know, but then I cry. And I cry - proper.
It’s not often I cry, mind you”).
Fuck ‘em.

Gloria

Gloria greets me in French her gift from Dominica and she gives her Rasta to me in a chant of slow grace and steeled unhappiness and she gives her Marxist intellectual to me her ideas like winged fish rippling and flashing from space to blue space.

That shiny pill-box hat she wears and the sweet round spectacles and the clean bright colour of her blouse hanging from hunched shoulders that seem to apologise that so refined a body should have somehow contrived to venture no further than its girlhood.

Sometimes her voice is the air a hurricane of rage and pent poetry driving us before her like dry leaves.

And sometimes she reverts and oh-how-delightful becomes small child
and simpers and defers
and wriggles in the sun.
We crane. We croon.

She is a commander
without an army
an admiral
who has no map
a star stageless.

Responsibility is taboo.
She knows it winds her up too much.
Her subjection to the wholly perfect drives her to mania.

There is a straight scar across her face a diameter that measures that fine arch of her cheek-bone.
All alone she made this thing by accessing a razor.
“Self-mutilation” is how the files put it.
Unanswerable voices called for it.
She had no choice.

To the Centre for Mental Health

At the time this poem was written, the centre was being “tendered out”. Isaac came into the Centre to clean after everyone else had gone. In those days people were still able to smoke on the premises.

Our elegant, cream coloured face looks blank this late somehow ill-fitting,
a cream-coloured question-mark at the terrace end.

Where tiredly alive silhouettes should be tending their lone evening meal, nothing but shadows
occupy these bare cavities, hollow projections
upon some dangerous screen.

Only Isaac
now animates
our tired rooms,
bellowing hymns
of solitary ecstasy.
As his Hoover roars
today's shy ghosts
hover round the ash-trays reluctant to separate.
Isaac smiles on them
he soothes
he comforts them
then tenderly tidies them away.

Tomorrow we'll try again.

They begin to congregate past midday like ragged butterflies around the buddlia.
A park bench out front offers some dignity but most prefer the door-step and way before time start leaning on the door-bell having nothing to be here for but here.

From the hostels the bed-sits the bare flats from lives lived in shadow and on the edge of everything it is here they congregate to establish meaning.
Here is their centre.

They say this :

“I am someone here
I am heard
I am not alone.”

“Here I have substance
I matter
I mean something.”

“I feel more at home here in this place
than I ever feel at home.”

“I have a share in the world.”

“I am not odd
I am even, here.”

“I am not assailed.”

And John the most “deluded” one says this :

“If someone erm
if someone came to buy if someone erm wanted to spoil this place surely that that would be er sacrilege, y’know.”

We may now be clear.
If sacrilege holds meaning here then holy may be real and a hyphen

rides
the unsafe waters,

the Ark on station.
Tomorrow
we’ll try again.
